Dear [redacted] I am forwarding you a memorandum regarding the formation of a new political movement called the "FRONTAL LIBERAZIONE" (Fronte della Liberazione or Liberation Front). The information in this memorandum was obtained from an interview by our friends across the street with Stefan TOMILU, a Romanian refugee of doubtful political connections. "The movement was founded about April or May, 1952 and is allegedly headed by Boris SIMA, former leader of the Iron Guard now supposedly in Brazil. The movement is said to be active in many countries of Europe and the Western Hemisphere, particularly in Italy, Germany, Austria, Spain, Brazil and Argentina. It was supposedly receiving some financial backing from Romanian refugees in the United States. However, most of the funds apparently come from Brazil, Argentina and Spain. Although the core of the movement is made up of former Iron Guard members, there has been extensive recruitment among all Romanian refugees. Tomalis reports that a number of members of the Free Romanian Committee, of which he is a member, have resigned in order to join the 'Front'. He displayed several such letters which invariably ended with the phrase Legionnaires as in the old Iron Guard. "According to Tomalis, the leadership of the Italian branch of the Front is vested in Otavian ROSU, a former Romanian who is now an attorney in Rome, and Nikola DRAGAN, who resides at Via Larga No. 11, Milan. Dragan is co-owner of a company that distributes BUTANGAS. He is alleged by Tomalis to be in possession of 500,000,000 Lire for the use of the Liberation Front. "The chief agent for recruitment of new members in the refugee camps is alleged to be Oshrogo RAILKAW, who is said to be a very violent man and incidentally illiterate. He is furnished money by Dragan to pay from 10,000 to 15,000 Lire to Romanian refugees as an inducement to join the Front. Railkaw is usually accompanied by Dimitro KUTZANU, a Bulgarian-born terrorist who travels frequently to other countries under assumed names, and Marin VASILU, who recently was in Foggiorale Prison in Naples for having falsified travel permits for refugees. It is noted that Marin Vasile is mentioned in the derogatory information regarding Tomalis, which is enclosed with this report. "Tomalis showed the reporting officer letters of resignation from the Free Romanian Committee (or League of Free Romanians) of five persons who have joined the Liberation Front. These persons are: Simion BUDA, John STANU, Ronaldo BASTAU, Vasile DUCU, and Alexander WILLOWAN, whom Tomalis says is a former member of the Romanian contingent in the German SS.
